We've made a deal

We've Done It!

We have Bought the Entirety of the Amazon
Rainforest!

Refresher

- Largest rainforest in the world
- Incredibly rich and diverse ecosystem
- Vital in fighting against climate change

What does this mean?

Full Authority

Under the agreement reached between us and the Brazilian Government, National Geographic has full authority over the Amazon Rainforest for the purposes of conservation. This agreement will be breached if National Geographic uses the Amazon and/or its resources for-profit or other malicious means.

Our Plans

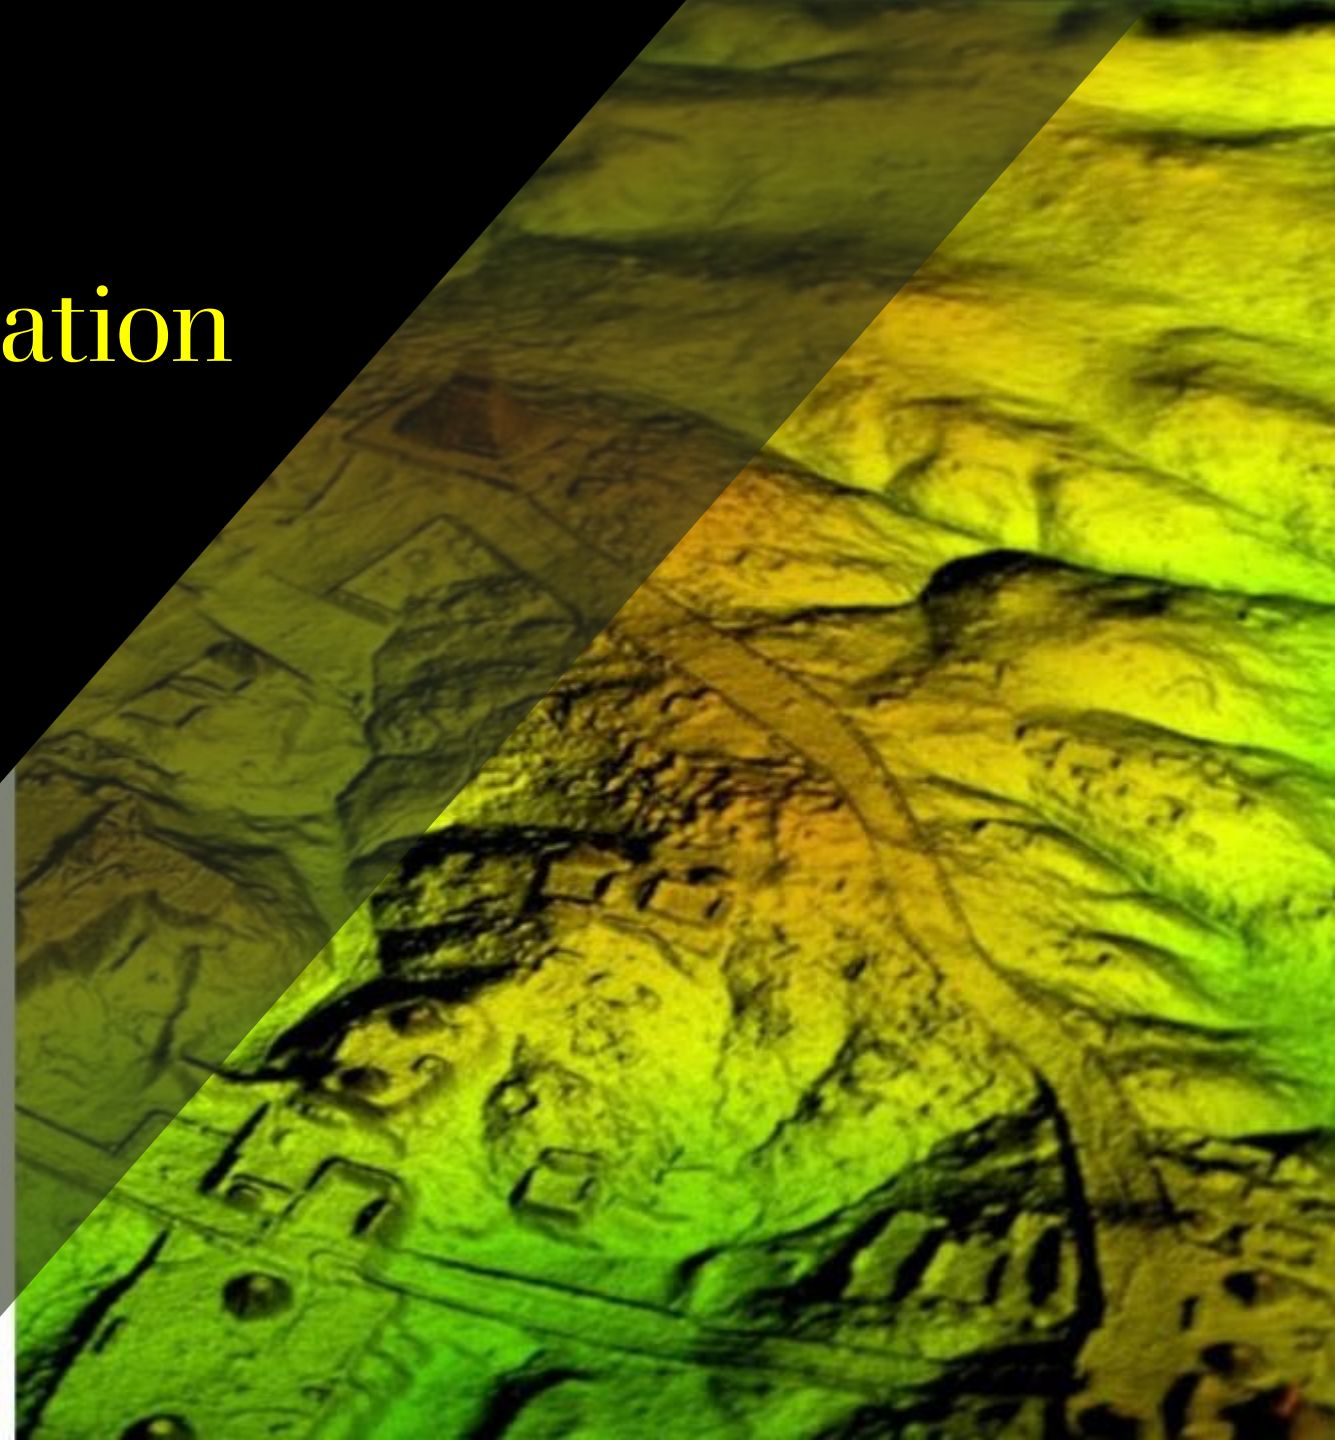

Complete Protection and Preservation

- Removal of all deforestation and monocrop farming.
- Protections and regulation similar to national parks service.
- Preservation works to restore damages and keeping the ecosystem alive.

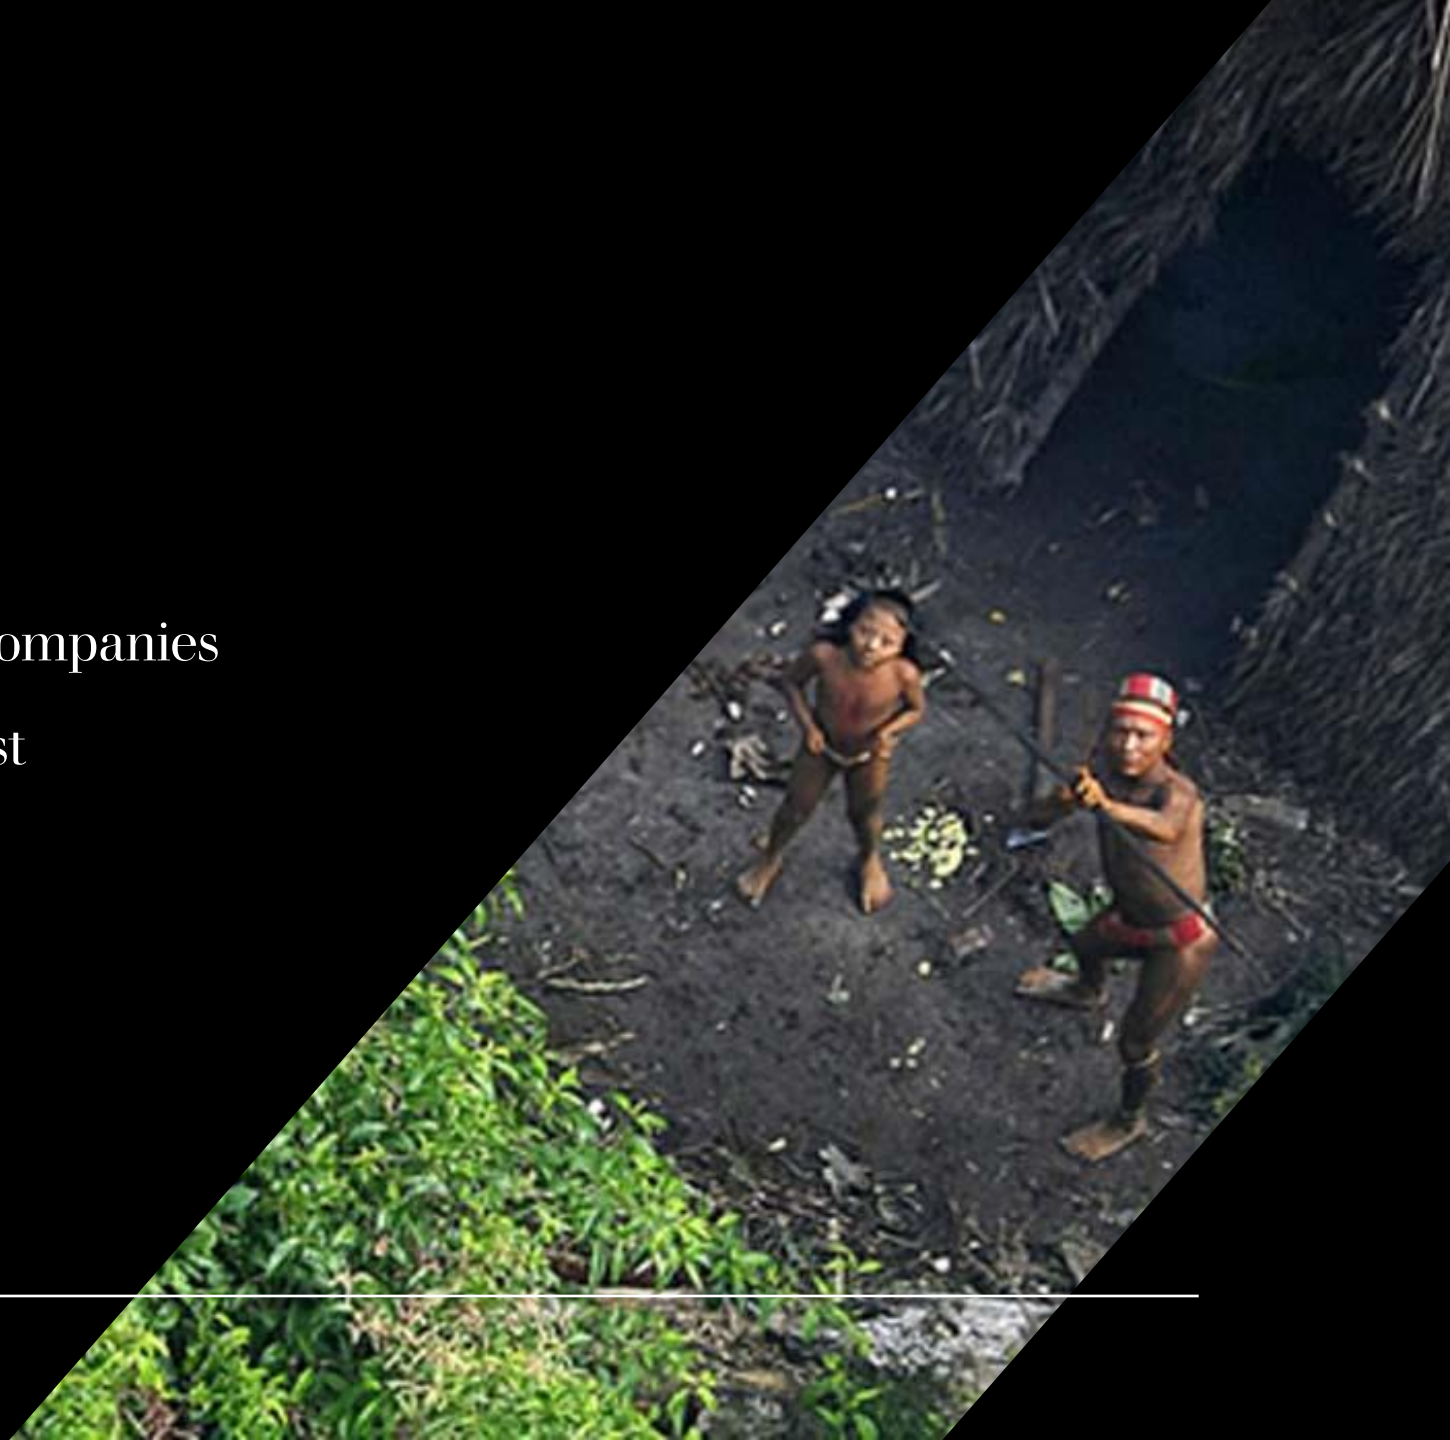

Research and Exploration

- Nat Geo Explorers will have full access to the rainforest for expeditions and resources.
- New Lidar/Topography scans previously prohibited will be followed through.
- New expeditions and research projects will be announced later next year.

Concerns

- Uncontacted tribes
- Already existing logging/farming companies
- Enemies of Brazil and the rainforest
- Change in Brazilian policy

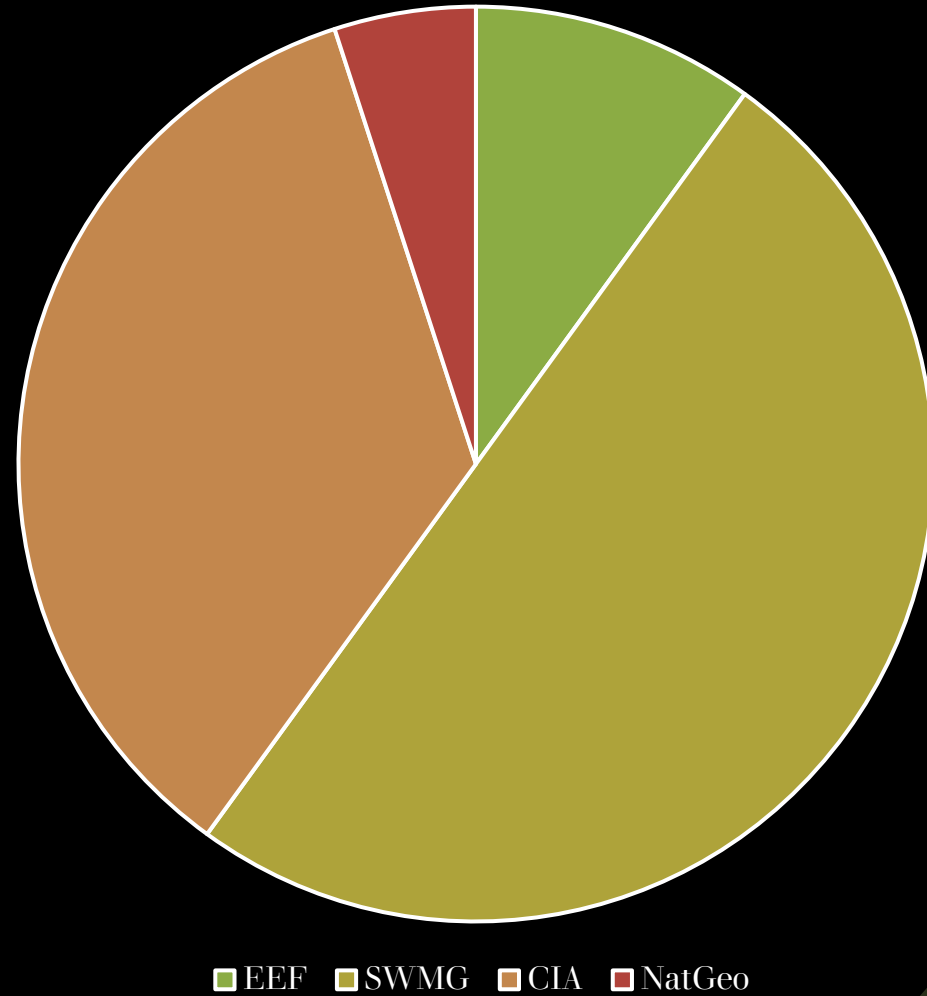

Our Solutions

- The agreement with Brazil will last for multiple terms, meaning Brazil will have no authority until the agreement has to be renegotiated
 - Uncontacted tribes will remain uncontacted, and territories will be mapped out to avoid unwanted contact on expeditions.
 - Logging and farming companies will be bought out by square acre of land contracted.
 - Personal Nat Geo Militia will be deployed to enforce authority
